SUNDANCE CONTINUED CHARACTER EDUCATION (4 WAYS TO INCREASE EMPATHY)

Read stories and watch movies together-Ask your child how do you think that character feels? There is no right answer. The point is to encourage empathetic feelings and reflections and hone their ability to sense other's feelings.

Allow your child to fully declare their feelings when they're having a difficult time with a sibling or friend-Ask your child if they can also express what the other person might be feeling and why. The point is to widen his or her sense of all that is truly going on in the situation.
Create a safe climate for your child to take responsibility for their feelings good or bad-There is no more effective facilitator of moral development than fostering children's willingness to take responsibility for their good and bad deeds. You can facilitate this by responding calmly and evenly when your child admits to misdeeds. They can still experience consequence for their actions, including your measured expression of disappointment.

Be a good listener-Take the time for open conversation with your child and answer their questions honestly, this provides endless opportunities to talk about caring for others. Lead by example and you'll accomplish a lot.
